

Justice, Worship, and Same Gender Marriage
26th Sunday after Pentecost
Amos 5:21–24

Daniel M. Hooper
November 8, 2008
Hollywood Lutheran Church

+

Oh boy! The First Reading today is challenging because it seems to fly directly in our face. There are many Christians who believe, for example, that the Bible is literally true, and, in its entirety, is applicable to every Christian everywhere for all time. They would say that you can't squirm out of the uncomfortable parts of the Bible because you don't think it applies anymore.

But, I wonder if they read this text the way it is written. The prophet is criticizing—in the name of God—the worship of the ancient Hebrews. Christian worship is different (we don't have a system of ritually sacrificing animals, for example, and burning their flesh on the altar), but if the Bible is entirely applicable to all Christians for all time forever, then this becomes a severe criticism of Christian worship here and now.

I don't take that view, but it is worth thinking it through. I still get nervous when this text comes up—which isn't very often—because I worry it makes some people very uncomfortable. Lutherans cling to a worship format, for example, which is very liturgical. It has a lot of structure and history. It has some antiquated words. We use things like paraments and vestments. But it is easy for those in other church traditions to say that this passage condemns liturgical worship. They prefer to sing praise songs, throw their hands in the air, and sway. Their minister wears plain clothes, and holds a big cordless microphone like an ice cream cone, or a big floppy-covered Bible which never leaves his hand.

There are Christians who will have nothing to do with festivals or a calendar of commemorations. There are others who will not have any musical instruments in worship—only the human voice. There are still others who worship the way they did in the fourth century, and they won't even talk about modernizing their liturgies.

But as it is written in the prophet Amos, “I hate, I despise your festivals, and I take no delight in your solemn assemblies. . . . Take away from me the noise of your songs; I will not listen to the melody of your harps.” The prophet would seem to say God is “turned off” by human worship, in whatever style it is, no matter how heart-felt or stiff, no matter how formal or casual, historic or innovative.

But all of this is the wrong approach to this passage of the Holy Bible. It is not about worship, fundamentally. It is about justice. Speaking in the name of God, the prophet is saying to the people, You believe you are shining it on with God, impressing God, drawing close to God because you are worshiping God and giving praise to God. But this doesn't please God. What God wants is not praise or liturgy but justice. This text is about the priority of justice, not the priority of praise. It is about how God's people conduct themselves in society, in the market place, and between neighbors and in families, not how they act in church!

Now, there's another problem here in applying the Scripture to our own times. This message was written to the Hebrew people living in a homeland they believed was given to them as a promised land because of their favored status with God. They were the “chosen people,” and were expected to shape their entire society by the Laws of God written in the Torah.

How do we apply that to Christians today living in a different hemisphere with every kind of people, language, custom and religion being practiced in America? We are not the chosen people; this is not the promised land, even though some early Americans wanted to liken themselves to the Israelites in that regard.

Most of us may not be aware of it, but there are a few Americans to this day with extremist views, who want to see the Bible used as the supreme law of this land, and enforced on all of the people in the United States whether they are Jewish or Christian or Muslim or atheists. Billionaire Howard Fieldstead Ahmanson is one of those people, who associated with the Christian Reconstructionist movement. His money came as an heir of the Home Savings fortune, and he has used it to support extreme right-wing causes, including his most recent donation of some $1,395,000 to the Yes on Proposition 8 campaign. He told the Orange County Register some years back, “My goal is the total integration of biblical law into our lives.”¹

What is justice? Is that justice? And how can Christians living in 21st century America pursue justice? We get ourselves in knots over current justice issues, but again I believe we cannot just apply the Bible to today’s justice like a band-aid—just wrap it around our society and make it stick! The hundreds of requirements of the Law of Moses four thousand years ago for semi-nomadic peoples living in tents in the desert just does not stick.

In many ways we have a more just society now than the Bible’s peoples ever expected of themselves. They accepted slavery, without question, and racism. The Bible’s answers to some problems which puzzle us today was to simply put trouble-makers to death. It is often quoted, for example, that Sodomites should be put to death, and apparently Howard Ahmanson now denies he was in favor of that. But the Law of Moses also says that’s what you do with a delinquent teenager who talks back to her or his parents.

I believe the point is that justice in a society where Christians participate is always in flux. There will always be change, and struggle to define justice, as we have seen last week with the wrenching experience over Proposition 8 on the ballot. Last night, if you haven’t seen this morning’s paper, over 12,000 people demonstrated in the streets of Silverlake against the passage of Proposition 8. But some Christians—and religious people who are not Christian—joined forces with others to “defend traditional marriage” between one man and one woman. That would seem to be a no-brainer for Christians except that the Bible didn’t define it that way at all. Western law, for example, has come to define marriage as requiring the consent of the parties, but the Old Testament in the Bible tells stories of marriages which were virtually forced upon un-consenting brides. And the Bible’s answer to rape was to require the rapist to marry the woman he had violated without the possibility of divorce. Ask any women today, conservative or liberal, if they think that would be justice. There would be a riot!

And polygamy was the standard allowance to men in the Old Testament. The New Testament only says that a bishop should be the husband of one wife, so for a period of time other Christian men were completely free to have several wives. Is that justice? Should that be the law of our land, today? Is that to be considered “binding” on every Christian, everywhere, for all time?

No one knows yet how California’s Proposition 8 will shake out. The Attorney General’s office has already stated that the 18,000 same-sex couples who got marriage licenses and were married since June 17 remain legally married. The supporters of Prop 8 will argue otherwise, and it will definitely wind up back in the California Supreme Court. Last week, attorney Gloria Allred immediately filed a new lawsuit in the court to overturn Proposition 8 as fundamentally unjust because it takes away existing civil rights from only one class of people.

In the interests of transparency and full disclosure, while I am personally invested in the outcome, I believe the church (including our church) should be invested in the broader issues of justice. Some conservative Christians believe in the need to defend traditional marriage, and my answer is that to protect marriage, everyone should begin by protecting your own marriage, if you have one. I told several reporters last summer, “if you want to protect marriage, buy your wife flowers every week, and listen to her when she talks to you. That will help to protect marriage.” What destroys marriage is not that lesbian and gay people want into it, in order to have legal protections for their relationships. What erodes marriage are the millions who want out of it, and leave a trail of serial monogamy, bitter divorces and broken families. Or those who trivialize faithful commitment.

For example, and this being Hollywood I have examples from Hollywood: Rick Rockwell and Darva Conger married on the television program “Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire,” and stayed married less than two months. Colin Farrell and Amelia Warner were married five months. Jennifer Lopez and Cris Judd lasted 6 months. Drew Barrymore and Jeremy Thomas remained married for 38 days. Dennis Rodman and Carmen Electra married, and it lasted for 9 days. Mario Lopez married Ali Landry and two weeks later she had the marriage annulled. Britney Spears married Jason Allen Alexander. It lasted for 55 hours. Proposition 8, on the ballot, protects those marriages² and state law permits those divorces, over and over and over. But Proposition 8 does not want to recognize our faithful commitment of over 32 years, and means to take civil rights away from us.

The bottom line here is not that the Bible can be applied neatly, or that an answer can be found for every question if you just search carefully and study long enough. The bottom line is that God wants justice to be done, and that Christians should give justice a priority. This is a post-Christian society we live in, so we can’t impose our Christian view on civil law, but neither can any other Christian view, whether Baptist or Catholic or whatever. But the prophet’s message is clear that seeking justice, establishing justice ought to be our top priority, even more important than being religious and making a public display of our piety.

Christian worship can be rich and elaborate, or plain and simple. We can kneel or sway, cross ourselves or raise our hands, or all of the above. But if we love God, if we are moved by the Good News of Jesus’ love to redeem us and to re-shape our world, then we must also love justice enough to put our faith in the midst of daily life, so that the world will know that God’s justice is love, and our love is real, and that the love of Jesus Christ can change this world until “justice rolls down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream.” Amen.

Notes

1. These web sites were used: <http://www.nndb.com/people/374/000058200/> ;
<http://www.queerty.com/ahmansons-dangerous-crusade-goes-beyond-prop-8-20081104/> ;
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Howard_Ahmanson,_Jr. ;
http://www.alternet.org/blogs/democracy/106102/the_man_behind_proposition_8/ ;
<http://www.thedailybeast.com/blogs-and-stories/2008-11-03/the-man-behind-proposition-8/1/>
2. <http://www.hollywoodheartbreaker.com/shortest-celebrity-marriages/>